

Welcome to the Latest Issue of Literal Translations, a print anthology of Litmocracy.com.

This issue contains Pakistani writer Ernest Dempsey's most controversial article Fake Research in Geochemistry at the NCE in Geology, University of Peshawar – an internet post that stormed the web on September 11, 2008. Known as the 9/11 of academic towers in Pakistan, Dempsey (whose real name is Karim Khan) is being sued for defamation by the professor whose forgery was exposed by this revealing post.

In the aftermath of Dempsey's revelation, the censored data was secretly changed at the institute's library and Dempsey was suspended from his job at the center to veil the forgery. Literal Translation presents the original article that has made Dempsey the center of conflicts in a corrupt academic system. Pick your copy of Literal Translation today to read Dempsey's article and many other enthralling entries. As of now, Dempsey is garnering support from students/teachers/writers and anyone in the academic world to write to the authorities and express support for this writer who stood up against the mockery propagated in the name of education.

Dave Scotese
Litmocracy Publications

Litmocracy has been using a democratic cooperative competition to identify good writing since 2005. The best stuff earns its authors some cash and gets published in Literal Translations, Litmocracy's print magazine. Membership is free, entertaining to readers, and profitable to readers. See how your work compares to that of others! We have no biased editor to make these decisions. If your work is good enough for the membership, you'll get paid for it. We're currently also running an unpublished book contest for a $1000 prize.

Visit www.litmocracy.com for your free membership.

